(bishop of Ross) __NOTOC__ Cynogem or Cynograim (; died 676) was the Bishop of Ross in the late 7th century. Little is known of Cynogem's family background but he is probably related to his predecessor Alchfrid, who died in 680. Cynogem is the first bishop of Ross to have a dedicated see. He is an obscure figure and in fact there is no contemporary written record of him. His apparent date of death is the last of the period covered by the "Annals of the Four Masters", and he may be the Cynograim referred to in the "Book of Leinster" in which an Archbishop of Armagh held the title "High Steward of Ireland". He is believed to have died after the death of Saint Bride of Bangor in 680. As previously reported by WND, Chicago police recently arrested Kevin Morris, a CBS radio host and WLS producer, for allegedly threatening a member of the media in a phone conversation. Police said Morris became irate when a certain broadcaster – who had used a gay slur during an on-air interview with a police officer – invited Morris to his home to speak with the officer on the matter. Morris reportedly hung up the phone and allegedly said, “We don’t need two fs.” A couple of days ago, we learned a new fact about a story that is just as explosive. The Associated Press took down the story from their website, and has done so ever since. According to Fox News, the story in question concerned the alleged rape of at least six female passengers by TSA agents in Philadelphia on Sept. 28, 2014. The airline that the alleged victims were traveling on said the stories were untrue, however, they did state that one of the five Americans on board had allegedly made claims of sexual misconduct on the flight.
