To start, select View > Image Size to scale the image to your liking. Once you're happy with the dimensions you want, you can skip ahead and start making changes. The steps below are for making a photo look great when you print it. Some of these tips may also be useful for other usage scenarios such as modifying web images for use on a website.

1. Bring down the brightness level (levels) The first and most important step to any image improvement technique is to bring down the brightness level (levels) of the image. Before: After:
2. Brighten up the highlights (Highlights) Next, bring the image to a level that will allow you to make some changes without saturating the image. Before: After:
3. Bring down the brightness of the shadows (Shadows) In this case, the image looks to be too dark in the shadows, so we need to adjust the levels in a way that will allow us to change the shadows without increasing the contrast. Select Image > Adjustments > Levels. Before: After: If your monitor is calibrated, the image should look good in just a few clicks, but if it isn't, you may need to tweak the curve. Here is what you'll see: You'll see a Curves dialog box where you can drag the Curves points left or right to get the results that you want.
4. Separate the light and shadow details (Channels) Next, create a new channel by selecting Layer > New Channel from the menu bar. This will make the image a lot easier to work with and in turn, give us better control over the final result. After creating a new channel, select the Color Picker tool and click on the color that you want to isolate. Then click the color that you want to use as the highlight. Next, you can leave your highlight color in place, or hit Delete to discard it. Next, click the Select button and pull up the drop-down menu and select the Channel mask option. You now have a new channel and can move the channel to its own layer. You can adjust the Channel mask from the original layer that you had made, or you can create a new layer and create a new Channel mask. Before: After: Note: You can increase

A: Do the following: class ProductCategory(models.Model): product_count = models.IntegerField(max_length=255) category_count = models.IntegerField(max_length=255, unique=True) class Meta: unique_together = (("product_count", "category_count"),) def clean(self, *args, kwargs): if not self.category_count and self.product_count and not self.category_count == self.product_count: raise ProductCategory.DoesNotExist This is from official documentation: When using custom validation the order of validators on the model class is not enforced. The following example can be useful if you want to ensure that two fields in a model are of equal length: class MyModel(models.Model): myfield1 = models.CharField(max_length=100) myfield2 = models.CharField(max_length=100) # Custom validation for checking that myfield1 is of equal length as # myfield2 def clean(self): length1 = self.myfield1.length length2 = self.myfield2.length
