Q: When will the moon orbit the Earth? When does the moon orbit the Earth, 360°/year? A: The moon is obviously going around the Earth "at least once every day", but as it does so it's travelling "slightly faster" than the Earth revolves around the Sun. This leads to a lunar day of 1/15th of a day by the Earth, so that when the moon is exactly over one of Earth's poles the line from the centre of the Earth to the centre of the moon is a straight line, and it's going at that speed. We call these lines "ecliptic". The "obvious" answer is "when the moon is at the same place in the sky as the Sun". But when it's the same place in the sky as the Sun, that's not the same as being the same place as one of Earth's poles. If you get a planetarium or any simulation software, you'll see that the plane of the moon's orbit doesn't follow a straight line around the Earth, but wobbles around like a little boat on a small lake. The centre of the moon's orbit is called the "apogee", or "upper limit of the orbit". It's at the point on the orbit that's furthest away from the Earth. But as the "apogee" is moving faster than the "perigee", because of the small amount of nudge caused by the relative motion, so the "apogee" is over the poles rather than over the equator. But even when the "apogee" is over the pole, it's still moving faster than the centre of the Earth, and so even when it's at exactly the same time as the Sun, it's still moving faster than the centre of the Earth. So the Moon's orbit isn't the same line as the equator, it's a long thin ellipse. So the answer is, once every lunar month (a bit more than a month) because that's
