Dopamine D2 receptor occupancy after sublingual and oral sufentanil administration. This study was conducted to determine the relationship between the sufentanil concentrations achieved by sublingual and oral administration and the subsequent D2 receptor occupancy in nine healthy subjects. R(+)- and S(-)-sufentanil were administered sublingually at doses of 3 microg and 6 microg, respectively, followed 1 h later by oral administration of 3 microg of R(+) and S(-)-sufentanil. Blood samples were collected at regular intervals during and after the study for determination of the levels of sufentanil and its metabolites. Urine samples were collected as early as 4 h post-administration. Sublingual and oral administration of sufentanil resulted in comparable levels of sufentanil and des-isosufentanil as well as des-tyrosine-sufentanil in blood. Sulfoxide-sufentanil was barely detected in blood. There was no significant difference in the D2 receptor occupancy at sufentanil concentrations of 1.5 to 7 times that found in blood after sublingual versus oral administration. There was also no significant difference in the D2 receptor occupancy of R(+) and S(-)-sufentanil administered sublingually versus orally. Taken together, these findings indicate that, in addition to the rapid absorption of sufentanil through the oral mucosa, the lack of active metabolites limits the systemic effects of oral sufentanil. The modest sufentanil concentrations achieved in oral saliva and blood are not associated with a greater D2 receptor occupancy.

Neurofibromatosis is a disorder characterized by multiple cafe-au-lait spots, cutaneous neurofibromas and increased risk of developing peripheral and central nervous system tumors. To our knowledge, this is the first case of a patient with neurofibromatosis type 1 (von Recklinghausen's disease) who was found to have multiple neoplasms, including two well-differentiated gastrointestinal stromal tumors and a large intramedullary schwannoma with preserved appearance. The patient had no family history of neurofibromatosis. An analysis of NF1 (neurofibromin) revealed a loss-of-function mutation (370 del AGAG) and a missense mutation (1737 C-->T). The normal gait and relationship between the two broad stance phases are influenced by whether the stance foot is a rear or front foot. Gait patterns of elderly with normal cognitive function were investigated using an instrumented walkway. The results showed that gait patterns are significantly different between rear foot and front foot. A series of EMG patterns were used to describe the changes in temporal gait events which were investigated by analysis of variance (ANOVA) of the EMG signals. The results of the wavelet transform were then used to investigate the relationship between the normal gait cycle and stance phase which includes the temporal relationship between the stance phase on each foot for the whole gait cycle. The results of the wavelet transform indicated that the normal gait pattern of elderly with normal cognitive function had a very close relationship with the gait pattern of young persons. The solar SOHO is ESA's first satellite to be launched into a heliocentric orbit - ie. an orbit around the sun as opposed to the Earth. The SOHO also arrived at the sun for its first image-based observation of the sun itself, immediately after being launched from Europe's Spaceport in French Guiana. The image is the first recorded of the solar surface in
