Formation of hematogenous metastases is generally believed to occur through the process of intra-vascular penetration and extravasation. Reactive changes in the capillary endothelium, influenced by secreted factors from transformed cells, mediate the process of extravasation from the vasculature. The primary factor which effectuates this process is, reportedly, the generation of changes in the endothelial membrane system through the proteinase activity of the plasma membrane. The influence of plasma membrane changes upon the function of the vascular endothelium is evidenced by the findings of Pui and Pui, Invest. U.S. Int. Ed. (1980) 19, 1207 and Sugano et al, Cancer Res. (1981) 41, 1190.

Rheumatoid arthritis is a debilitating and disabling disease which is difficult to treat. In particular, rheumatoid arthritis is characterized by edema of the joints and alteration of the cartilage of the joint. These changes, in the case of edema, result in inflammation and deterioration of the cartilage resulting in bone erosion and loss of movement in the affected joint. The edema associated with arthritis may also result in enlargement of the involved organ and extravasation of fluid into the interstitial spaces of the organ. Such fluid extravasation into the interstitial spaces further contributes to the edema. The cause of the edema which is found in the various joints, the synovium, tendon sheaths and the like associated with rheumatoid arthritis is unknown. Further, it is not known which factor or factors produced by inflammatory cells in the joint is responsible for the edema associated with arthritis. In addition, it is not known whether factors produced by inflammatory cells in the joint are present in blood and, if so, at what concentration. It is known that the activated inflammatory cells produce an increase in the release of biologically active agents such as prostaglandins and proteolytic enzymes. In particular, the activated inflammatory cells produce increased quantities of the specific enzyme, plasmin. Plasmin acts on the inhibitors of plasmin which are bound to fibrin resulting in degradation of fibrin and the subsequent dissolution of clots. In addition, plasmin is known to be involved in the extravasation of fluid into the joint area. Further, it is known that the production of the enzyme plasmin, which may be involved in the formation of arthritic edema, is not limited to the

From Maryland to Utah What inspired you to embark on this journey and set out to renew your spiritual connection? I wanted to step out of my comfort zone and see if I could discover something that I was missing from my life. I was asked by God to take a step of faith and I didn’t know what to expect. Were you expecting some kind of miracle? I had always identified more with the Norse culture and I knew that they inspired my ancestors to settle in the U.S. When researching the Norse, I learned that there are a lot of similarities with my background and that I may have chosen the same path as my ancestors did. What was the first challenge you encountered? The first challenge was the cold and the heat of the United States. I was living in Maryland and there was so much snow! My first experience on the East Coast was difficult and I felt like it was a total culture shock. I had been to Canada several times, so I thought I would have an easier time in the northern part of the States. But I was only there for a short period of time. I didn’t feel I knew anything about America before leaving. I just knew that it was a country that was filled with vikings. My ancestors settled there. How did you get over this first obstacle? I don’t know. I felt like I knew how to move with all this cold and snow, so it wasn’t
