A hydrophobic site on the enzyme glutamate racemase binds the substrate-binding domain. The two subunits of glutamate racemase (EC 5.1.1.1) are composed of a small (alpha) and a large (beta) subunit, which are homologous to a chorismate mutase, and a phosphopantothencysteine decarboxylase. From sequence analysis, the beta-subunit appears to be the product of a gene that codes for a polypeptide with chorismate mutase activity. Chorismate mutase and glutamate racemase are the first known glycoenzyme and non-glycoenzyme to contain a phosphopantothencysteine decarboxylase. The chorismate mutase domain of glutamate racemase (beta subunit) catalyzes the condensation of L-glutamate and chorismate to give L-glutamate-5-semialdehyde. This enzyme domain also binds the phosphopantothencysteine decarboxylase domain (alpha subunit) and shows a very high affinity ($K_m = 10^{-6}$ M) for the substrate-binding domain (chorismate mutase domain) in the alpha subunit. The beta subunit confers the hydrophobic properties to the enzyme, and a short amino acid sequence containing a hydrophobic site that binds the chorismate mutase domain has been identified in the beta subunit of glutamate racemase. In the enzyme the substrate is bound at this hydrophobic site, which is exposed to the solvent in the free enzyme and in the

My last column on the impact of the partial repeal of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform Act was at a time when Washington was cranking up to "rage against the dying of the light," and the new Republican majorities in Congress were aiming to carry out their dreams of ripping up this law, or at least doing a little bit of what Democrats and progressives thought it would have done. The Republicans have kept up that kind of assault on regulations. While having the same vision of "deregulation" as the tea party Republicans, they have had the lack of presidential leadership and discipline to push those ideas through. Their votes are easy enough to find. The problem is that they have been few and far between, even when Donald Trump held the White House. The Republicans have also been dragging their feet, obstructing in the House of Representatives whatever Congress can do. The Senate voted 80-19 to reauthorize parts of Dodd-Frank, but the Republican majority of 51-49 has made it impossible for Obama's party to keep up their momentum and pass any of the reforms they want to see. In other words, the Democrats have had to move forward with their own agenda. Now that the Republicans have gone home for the November midterms, they don't have to worry about being blamed for anything. And the voters are getting ready to protest, in part because, thanks to Donald Trump, that Democratic agenda includes a whole lot of ideas about government, workers, and the middle class that he (and a lot of Republican Party leaders) don't really want to hear. The question is how the Democrats are going to deal with this. The Bernie Sanders insurgency in the primaries — and with his call for a much larger program of government activism — is a good start, but the problems go much deeper than the latest debate over whether bff6bb2d33

I have an outer class that, when I call a method, append an element to a list. And I have another subclass, which implements a method to append a nested child element to a list. I call the method on the nested child class, but the append method never seems to work. What am I doing wrong? Example: parent: public class Parent { public static void main(String [] args) { class Child implements ChildInterface { public Child(String name) { name = name; } @Override public String getName() { return name; } } List children = new ArrayList(); Child child = new Child("Joe"); children.add(child); child.append(new Child("Mike")); System.out.println("Joe"); } } subclass:
