Here, we investigate whether such shocks can also be effective at accelerating protons with energies above 1 TeV. Using the Monte Carlo simulations, we show that, in comparison to lower frequency waves, relativistic disc shock waves can accelerate higher energy particles by more than one order of magnitude, depending on the accretion flow parameters and how the particle distribution is injected. If the accretion flow is choked for a fraction of the time, then the shock can accelerate protons to energies above 1 TeV. When the accretion flow is highly super-Eddington, the highest energy particles can reach energies of a few TeV. We show that these particles can lose most of their energies in a small fraction of the dynamical time if the flow is choked. This implies that in these cases, the injection mechanism must be capable of injecting particles into the shock region at a higher rate than that of the wave." author: - | R.A. M. J.
