Essentially the method of movie making for desktop optical disc film has been based on the support of area-modulated infrared laser diode (IR). Laser diode is today's typical infrared light source. The usage of laser diode doesn't require conversion such as infrared-to-red or infrared-to-green. An infrared laser diode is usually connected to a box or case with an infrared optical fiber. The infrared light is derived from laser diode through optical fiber. To measure the amount of infrared light going in and out of the infrared optical fiber, infrared photodetectors are used.
