: Forced to Flee, the Last Descendants of Ancient Egypt's First Dynasty Find a New Home at the New Orleans Museum of Art After less than two years, a new exhibition opens at the New Orleans Museum of Art (NOMA) this week, presenting one of the largest collections of preserved funerary masks from Ancient Egyptian temples. Known as the Plague Lords, the group—consisting of 42 sculptures from XIX Dynasty rulers—was plundered and stashed away in the catacombs of an Egyptian temple in the 4th millennium B.C.E. when the temple was abandoned and abandoned again. The All Souls or 4th dynasty rulers, as they are known, once ruled Ancient Egypt between 3,100 and 2,900 B.C.E. Their most well-known ruler is King Narmer, the First Dynasty's "first ruler" who united most of the land under his rule by the end of the 4th millennium. Plundered and distributed all across the country, the Plague Lords preserved here are from a temple complex known as Kom Ombo, which was likely used by the plague lords to collect offerings from people suffering from contagious diseases. They were brought to the underground temple during a period of abandonment of the site in the early 5th millennium B.C.E. In the centuries following their depository, the Plague Lords traveled until they finally surfaced again in 1898, when thieves carved their heads and faces from some of the blocks used to build the sanctuary in which they were stored. After uncovering them, Italian Jesuit priest Luigi Ferdinando Marsigli and his nephew Victor Jacquemont used them to create these wonderful representations of terrifying stares out onto the landscape, crafted entirely in wood. The collection has been assigned to NOMA's Department of Decorative Arts and Design, which has been seeking an expansion of its previous holdings for many years. When it emerged that they might unearth these amazing Plague Lords, the department reorganized its entire collection of art, putting together collections of art and antiques to be displayed for the broader public in an exhibition that was unveiled in the summer of 2017. Joseph D. Rivers, the Emily and Peter B. Snyder Curator of
