Image quality is never the sole responsibility of Photoshop. Photoshop alone cannot create your image. Photoshop is a tool. It's an amazing tool to create awesome images, but it's not magic or a unicorn. To get great results, the images need to start with a great foundation. Practice editing photos. Look through the tutorials to learn how to use Photoshop properly. Go back and look at your earlier photos in your editing journey. Research image books to learn about common aspects of the photograph you want to create. Pay attention to commonly used editing techniques and apply them to the images you need to edit. Practice. Don't worry about spending lots of money on your Photoshop training. Don't rush. Learn about what the different tools in Photoshop do, how they work and how they can be used in creative ways. Choose a new hobby. Photoshop is a beautiful tool. It's a tool for taking a photograph and then creating art from that photograph. However, Photoshop is not the only tool to create a photograph. Photography can be a hobby in itself. Photo explorers create photographs that might include that one photo that you don't know how to edit. Don't confuse photography and Photoshop. Don't look for ways to increase your editing ability without learning to edit photography. Practice your photos. It might not be pretty, but before you start to edit photos, take some time to practice. Take some time and try to recreate the images you see in magazines. That's what I used to do with old photographs. I took new photos, created a frame and then used my editing skills to edit them. Practice the skills you think are important. Look at the books and share pictures of yourself. Learn as much as you can. Ask questions. The Internet is full of tutorials, Photoshop books and places to ask and learn about Photoshop. Learn with a printed book. There are a lot of books on Photoshop, but I find that the printed books have much better content than the electronic versions. They are full of images, lots of pictures and information. They teach you how to use Photoshop, but a printed book often shows you techniques or even how to create images that are not available in the electronic versions of the books. Randomised phase III trial of the cisplatin-based doublets doxorubicin/ifosfamide and doxorubicin/cyclophosphamide versus doxorubicin/vincristine/cisplatin in patients with untreated stage III B (or stage IV) Hodgkin's disease: the BIFAP study. The aim of the BIFAP study was to compare the efficacy and toxicity of the three-drug regimen doxorubicin/ifosfamide/cisplatin (AIC) with those of the four-drug regimen doxorubicin/vincristine/cisplatin/cyclophosphamide (AVC) in untreated stage III B (or stage IV) Hodgkin's disease. The study was a prospective randomised trial. One hundred and eighty-two patients were randomised to either AIC or AVC, and were treated with a total of 6 courses of initial radiotherapy and chemotherapy. Their characteristics were comparable in the two treatment groups. Among all patients, 67% were in first complete remission after two courses of treatment and 85% were in second complete remission at 6 months. No significant difference in hematological toxicity was observed between the two treatment arms. Grade 3-4 nausea/vomiting was significantly lower in the AIC arm (11.4% versus 23.2%, P = 0.039). In AIC-treated patients, the median duration of neutropenia was longer (20 days versus 16 days) and the rate of infection was significantly lower (8% versus 20%, P = 0.015). Time to next treatment was significantly longer for the AIC arm (21 days versus 18 days). The overall survival at 5 years was not significantly different between the two regimens. The 3-year overall survival rate was 51.6% in the AVC arm and 40.8% in the AIC arm (P = 0.138). The median follow-up time was 54 months. The 3-year relapse-free survival rate was 60.2% in the AVC arm and 66.6% in the AIC arm (P = 0.344). The 3-year progression-free survival rate was 55.5% in the AVC arm and 54.1% in the AIC arm (P = 0.503). The regimen AIC yielded fewer toxicities and a slightly longer time to next treatment and had
